Dear Attorney General,

One of the most productive companies in the United States is Microsoft. Due to its innovations in software, Microsoft has contributed a good share in the growth of the U.S. and the world economy. However, instead of rewarding for its contributions, it is punished for being too big and monopolistic. In its quest for growth, it may have hurt its competitors, but isn't that the way business operates? In competition, there is always one winner and many losers. But losers may improve and win the next time.

Microsoft has done its part to rectify the complaints against it. It has proposed a solution that will be beneficial to schools and the disadvantaged. It is a cost-effective solution, and it is time to move on. Any additional litigation will only raise the cost of software for everyone. In the end, who really pays? It is the consumer. That is not the way to bring us out of recession.

Thank you for reading this e-mail.
